SOCKS

by Maxwell Surprenant

I have socks that are orange and socks that are red,
I have socks that are smelly hiding under my bed.
I have socks that are snazzy and socks that are bland,
Socks that have holes and socks that are grand.
Socks that are purple and socks that are yellow
With my polk-a-dotted socks, I'm a happy fellow.
But I have a story that's sad and true-
There are many children, grown-ups, too,
Who don't have socks like me and you.
Their toes are cold, their feet are wet,
The poor and needy, we must not forget.
Let's donate socks, and show we care!
We'll make a difference with every pair!
And here's a little fact-
Spread the message far and wide:
When we give to others, we feel joy inside.
