Versatility in simplicity

A desire to retire from the stress of urban lifestyles. A dream of an idyllic holiday retreat. An attractive remote office. A conscious choice to reduce CO_2 footprints. A chance to put your unique creative spin on a modern classic. These are just a few of the reasons why A-Frame cabins, and small living, are making a huge comeback.

The origin of A-shaped living and storage spaces can be traced back centuries, with roots in Europe as well as China and the South Pacific. The modern A-Frame cabin we know today had its initial heyday in the 1950s to 1970s. In the US and Europe especially, a booming post-WWII economy allowed more families to enjoy new luxuries, big and small, and the A-Frame cabin was an attractive, inexpensive way to invest in a second home away from the cities.

Architects experimented with optimising the limited square footage and created building kits with assembly instructions to help new owners build and modify their cosy new homes to their needs, styles and environments. As international travel became more readily accessible in the late 1970s, the market for summer houses and country living faded. For the next decades, while the occasional A-Frames popped up as eye-catching local shops, the holiday home model was largely considered an outdated mid-century curiosity.

In the 2020s, the urge to return to this nostalgic way of life springs from different needs, as a natural extension of a global trend of scaling back on consumerism and embracing more individual and sustainable ways of living. The allures and benefits of the A-Frame cabin make it an obvious candidate for a triumphant revival for our age, with room for creativity and versatility in all its simplicity.

Meet the fan designer

Andrea Lattanzio (LEGO® Ideas name Norton74) lives in Milan, Italy. He started playing with his older brother's LEGO Technic and LEGO Classic Space sets as a child and, as an adult, he rediscovered his passion for building:

'To me, LEGO bricks are a medium to express my creativity and ideas. It's like playing music or painting a picture; building is an art form. Over the past decade, it has definitively become a big part of my life.'

A few years ago, Andrea started creating a series of rural houses, and he considers his A-Frame Cabin the pinnacle of this series:

"If you live a hectic life full of commitments and deadlines in a big city, it can feel quite alienating at times. Over the years, I've felt a growing need to live in a more natural and peaceful way without worrying about what "I have to do today". To me, the A-Frame Cabin represents a lifestyle truer and closer to nature. Not only because they're often built in the woods, but the main feature of this peculiar house is also its practicality. Two roofs as walls, a small terrace, and a multifunctional interior space. That's it. It's largely utilitarian, an easy way to enclose space with materials at hand as a form of shelter, for either human or animal occupation or for storage. It requires fewer materials and less labour to build than a full-size home. Its double-height living space makes it feel spacious and stylish, and it invites closeness. It's all about rediscovering the essence of simple things and true values by eliminating excess."

"If I can't live in a real A-Frame cabin for now, then I'm building one with LEGO bricks."

Andrea Lattanzio and his original submission

Meet the LEGO® designers

'Andrea's original fan submission included a complete interior crammed full of details that make for great story starters and give the builder a full 360-degree play experience both inside and around the A-Frame cabin. One of my favorite details is a micro-build of the LEGO® Ideas Tree House (21318), one of Andrea's LEGO inspirations for his original submission. What better way to relax in your cabin than to play with a LEGO set!'

Justin Ramsden, LEGO Ideas Model Designer

'I love cabin life and I was excited to maximise all the cozsiness of Andrea's cabin in every detail, from cute bugs and animals to the warm wardrobe. This is one of the first times we have used a decorated butterfly element to create an Emperor Moth, and you can find another one of Andrea's creations, Blue Cottage, in the painting above the bed. You can tell your own story: Is it a sibling trip, a romantic getaway or friends going on adventures? All up to you!'

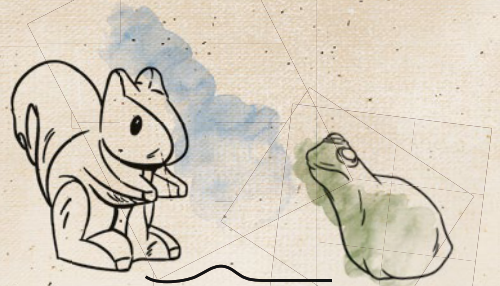

Kenza Faten Statoua, LEGO Ideas Graphic Designer

'We worked hard to represent the harmony between humans and nature A-Frame cabins can bring to their environment, everyone has a home here. Take time to hone your photography skills, go canoeing, write that novel you've always wanted to publish, jam with friends around the fire or go bird-spotting. We really want you to make this your perfect getaway!'

Ollie Gregory, LEGO Ideas Model Designer

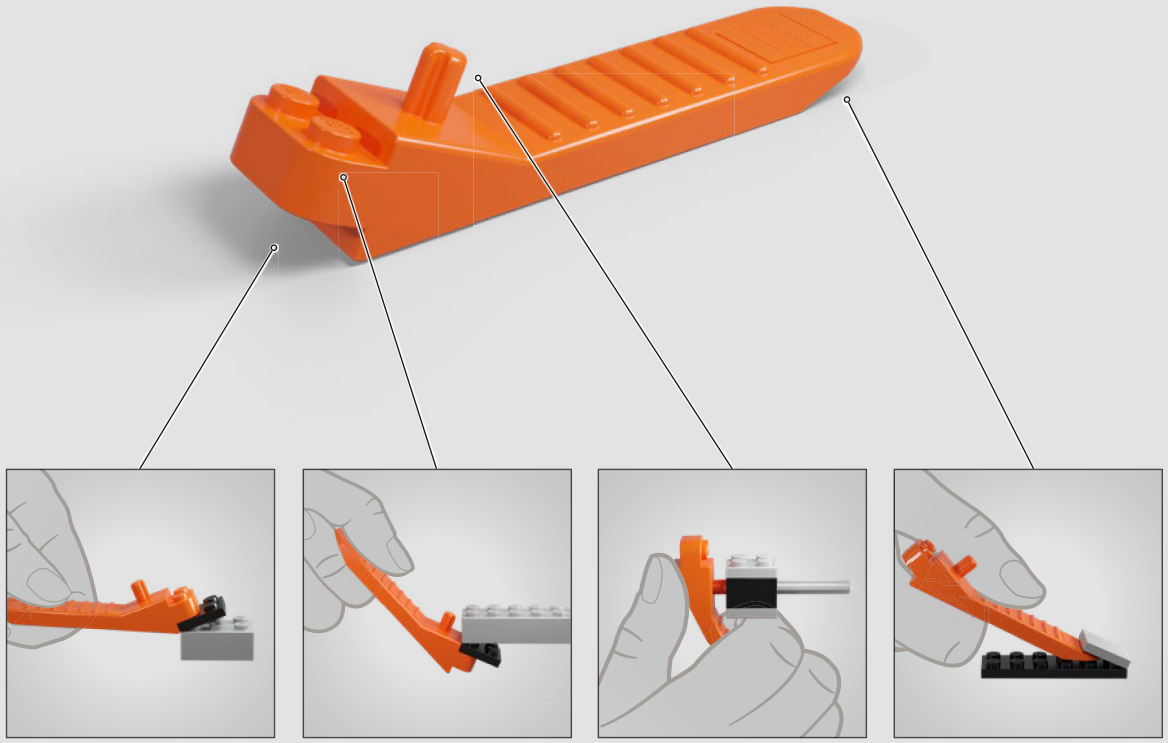

'With my architectural background, I really got to put my understanding of structure, form, space and function to use! An advantage of an A-Frame cabin is that it provides structural support, eliminating the need for internal columns. We split the build into smaller sections and combined them to complete the wall. Lining up all the angles to allow the roof to close with minimal gaps was very satisfying.'

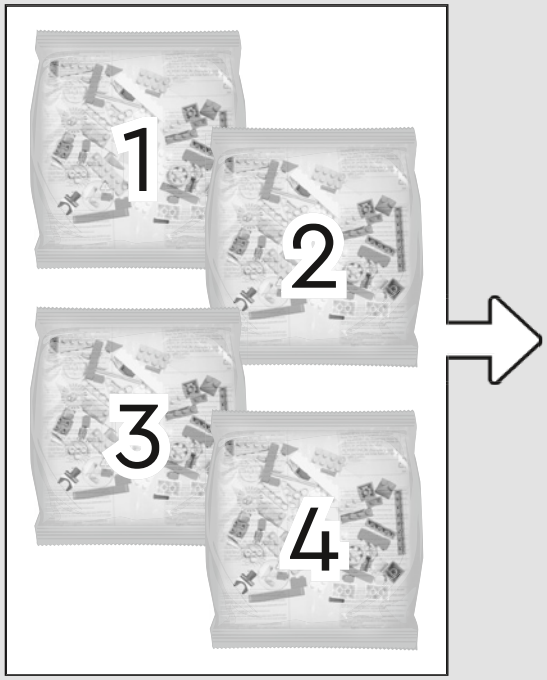

Woon Tze Chee, LEGO Ideas Model Designer
