Meet the Fan Designer

Fan designer Maximilian Lambrecht (LEGO® Ideas name HisBrickMaterials) is a visual effects artist from Germany – with a passion for nature:

"I try to spend my free time away from anything screen-shaped; either at the piano, painting, drawing or playing board games. But nature is my single most surprising, spectacular and grounding source of inspiration! I particularly love otters, and for this model, I watched documentaries and went to the local zoo, drawing outlines and sketches for the LEGO version. I wanted to capture the otter's playful essence, and I looked forward to engaging with other fans about building tricks – and making 'otterly' bad puns! The otter is shown in its natural habitat, with an imaginary sense of depth. I added rock elements, claw accessories, modified tiles, slopes and various parts of vegetation to the model, and adjusted the brick colours for a harmonious appearance. Still, I couldn't have dreamed of this outcome – it's an unreal experience that I will cherish for a loong time."

MAXIMILIAN'S ORIGINAL SUBMISSION:

From the LEGO® Ideas Design Team

Maximilian's playful otter immediately resonated with us. Working with him, we decided to enhance its realistic appearance while keeping the cute factor, of course, so we included a sleeping otter pup that lies on its mother's belly. Otters are quite long, but the floating pose was perfect for the model, with the otter's legs curled upwards. Sea otters' colours vary, depending on species, region and age. The wet body fur is often a very dark brown and the head a bit lighter, so we have abstracted the colours to enhance the building experience. We wanted to be able to move its arms, allowing it to press its hands against its face (a very common otter pose) and reach forward to either place a hand on its pup or the clam. This proved to be a fun challenge. The elbow had to look 'submerged' or like it was in the water. We created a cutout on the water surface that closely matched the shape of the lower arm, and to have a full range of motion, we included two points of articulation below the water's surface.

MOVING ARMS

Oh, to be a sea otter pup! If this one swims off to play elsewhere, you can gently move mum's arms and place her favourite snack here instead.

CURLED UP LEGS

Both the legs and toes can be articulated to mimic the sea otter's different playful poses.

DEPTH IN DETAILS

We added extra depth to the water parts, with layered blue and green elements and an outline layer below the water layer, to create the illusion of the full size of the otter.

The old man of the sea

With those big, dark eyes and cuddly-toy looks, sea otters seem like you could just hug and smooch them! Add their clever behaviour to the mix, and the cuteness factor goes through the roof. They float on their backs, nap in kelp and even hold hands so they don't drift apart (aaaw!). Using rocks – some even stash their favourite one in a handy little pouch – they crack open clams, mussels or crabs. Snacking off their bellies, they look like they're living their best lives on a permanent poolside holiday. Since they don't have blubber to keep warm, sea otters rely on their incredibly dense fur – up to a million hairs per square inch. With all that fluff, staying clean and well-groomed is a full-time job. They're super sociable, raise their pups in the water and snuggle them closely while teaching them how to swim, play and thrive. If you're lucky enough to spot one in the wild, just remember, the "old man of the sea" values its personal space, so make sure you appreciate them from a safe distance.

Along the shallow coastal waters of Alaska and the North Pacific, sea otters are typically found on rocky shores, barrier reefs, kelp forests and foreshores.

They take excellent care of their 'tools' (rocks) – and each other. We hope you'll love taking care of this one!
