Enjoying the ride since 1927™

Founded in 1927 and operating until 1991, Pan American World Airways – Pan Am® – entered its most glamorous era with the commission of the venerable PAA® Douglas™ DC-3™ in the mid-1930s. As the first airline to fly worldwide, Pan Am, as well as the DC-3, are still regarded as icons that transformed air travel and pioneered world travel as a lifestyle. Crossing continents meant more than transportation; it signalled prestige and sophistication. The PAA DC-3 brought unmatched reliability to both domestic and transatlantic routes. Pan Am's service, renowned for the flight crew's crisp, stylish uniforms, refined cabins and unrivalled hospitality, still epitomises the golden age of flying, setting the global standard for refinement, luxury and elegance in the skies.

The world is yours

The Douglas™ DC-3™ first flew on 17 December 1935, with the first delivery in June 1936, and went on to dominate 1940s airline fleets, with 455 DC-3s built for commercial use by 1946. A low-wing, twin-engine monoplane, it can take off from short runways and comfortably land in a tight squeeze, which made it ideal for almost any destination and terrain. Pilots favoured the DC-3 for its reliability and manoeuvrability, while passengers enjoyed its pristine comforts and, of course, exotic travel adventures across the world! Today, if you know where to look, you might still see a few of them soaring through the skies.

Although the Douglas name has been retired, its history and designs live on within Boeing's Commercial Airplanes division, which continues to proudly steward the legacy of the DC-3.

From your LEGO® Icons Design crew

The Douglas™ DC-3™ is a great candidate for our travel-themed LEGO® Icons vehicles collection. We wanted to create a highly detailed model, a nostalgic nod to an exciting era, that is also sturdy enough to be taken off the stand and studied in detail. The tops of the cockpit and passenger cabin can be removed so you can peek inside. With great help from our partners at Pan Am® and Boeing, who retrieved a rare colour cabin illustration from their archives to share with us, we built the model almost to LEGO minifigure scale, with retractable landing gear and an impressive wingspan. Early in the design process, we decided to replicate what is probably the most iconic Pan Am 1959 livery, seen on only a few DC-3s, as an homage to the era when this aircraft was the backbone of air travel. (Chances are you've seen it in films that either premiered or took place around that time!) Printed decorations on the model include a new windscreen and the iconic Pan Am Globe® logo on a new 6x6 LEGO tile. To complete the scene, we designed a LEGO minifigure crew clad in vintage uniforms, including a new, historically accurate hat element, and we built in the signature blue fuselage strip.

"We hope you'll enjoy your time aboard and explore a world of building fun!"

- The LEGO® Icons Design Team

The uniform hat introduced in 1970 was sometimes called a derby hat, but within the company, it was commonly referred to as the bowler hat.

Colour illustrations of the DC-3™ are hard to find, so for Boeing to share a coloured cabin illustration from their archives was a real treat! It revealed that the interior featured a dark-red carpet and sand-blue seats.

The actual celebrity designer uniforms first appeared in 1958 with the launch of the B-707. Hollywood fashion designer Don Loper designed the uniforms for Pan Am® stewardesses at the launch of the Jet Age.

Both male and female flight attendants could be promoted to the purser (lead) position on the aircraft. From the 1960s onward, women increasingly filled this role.
